ADVANCED STUDIES

Africa's Place in the New World Order

This course addresses Africa's changing place in the world from a political and from a peace and security perspective. It highlights new academic approaches in the study of the continent's global entanglements as well as African debates on emerging peace and security issues, including unconstitutional changes of government and transitional justice.

Participants are exposed to a variety of issue areas on Africa's changing role in global politics and academic ways to address these. They will learn how to read current debates on Africa's place in the new world order in-the-making and develop an understanding of how African actors are trying to make their voices heard in these processes, and what kind of strategies are employed to this end.

Key themes:

- Africa's integration into current processes of globalization
- Africa and BRICS
- The African Union and regional organizations
- The African Governance Agenda
- Africa and the International Criminal Court (ICC)
- The Horn of Africa and Switzerland
