Rationale

The conference invites the speakers and audience to reflect on a classical work in the field of African Studies, Africa and the Disciplines (V. Mudimbe, R. Bates and J. O'Barr 1993), but also consider the present and future of African Studies, in particular in Switzerland.

25 years ago, the conference "Africa and the Disciplines" and the landmark publication that resulted from it, asked for Africa's contribution to the disciplines. It showed the extent to which Africa as an apparently marginal field of study had already contributed to the emergence of new topics and ideas in the respective disciplines.

The momentum created by these insights within broader academia was, unjustifiably, short lived. Especially so given that the study of Africa has not only contributed to the development of the disciplines; as an interdisciplinary field, but has also changed the character of what once were separate disciplines and brought them closer together.

Scholars became increasingly interested in the spaces between the disciplines. This interest, which is usually cast in terms of interdisciplinarity or transdisciplinarity, has bred a wide range of new and interesting studies with stimulating findings. Africa has created new research fields that no longer fit into the existing disciplinary framework. This increasingly affects our view of what the social sciences and the humanities are about, the topics that they will need to address in the future and how these new fields shape our understanding of the academic landscape as a whole.

Structure

Over two days the conference will hold four interactive, interdisciplinary plenary sessions. Each session will begin with a 30-minute moderated "paired conversation" between two scholars of a particular discipline. The choice of two "classic" disciplines – Anthropology and History –, and two "modern" inherently interdisciplinary disciplines, Public Health and Urban Studies, – reflects change in the field of African Studies.

Each of the eight conversation partners was invited to reflect on a relevant chapter of the book Africa and the Disciplines, as well as their own experience in academia as an Africanist: How has the field developed since they started. What experiences have they had with non-Africanist colleague's in academia who question the value of the study of Africa? What types of armour (intellectual or otherwise) have they developed, as a result?

Immediately following the "paired conversation," to enhance the dynamic, interactive and interdisciplinary purpose of the conference, the audience will be randomly divided into three to four breakout sessions where participants and panel speakers will consolidate the introduced topics in a concentrated group discussion. At the end of each session the audience will reunite for a moderated discussion in the plenary.

Fee Structure:

The fee covers coffee breaks, lunches and reception.

Regular: CHF 60.- (SSAS members: CHF 40.-)
Students: CHF 30.- (SSAS members: CHF 0.-)

Students, including PhD candidates, are encouraged to join the SSAS on the occasion, so as to benefit from the discount.

Venue:

The conference is being held at the main building of the University of Basel.
The plenaries are all held in room 001.

Kollegienhaus
Petersplatz 1
4051 Basel)

Directions:

From the main train station (Bahnhof Basel SBB), take bus #30 to "Universität" (about three stops). From there, follow the short street "Auf der Lyss" to its end, turn left onto "Leonhardsgraben" and then "Petersgraben", and follow this road for about 100 meters. The Kollegienhaus will be on your left.

From the German train station (Basel Badischer Bahnhof) also take bus #30 to "Spalentor" (15 minutes). From there, walk down "Spalengraben" to the venue.

From "Basel Euro Airport" take the shuttle (bus #50) to "Basel Bahnhof SBB" and then change to bus #30 (see above).

Tram #3 and bus #34 also service the conference venue with two additional "Universität" stops adjacent to the Kollegienhaus.
